I.—Extracts from Tibetan Works, translated by M. Alexander Csoma de Körös.

Tibetan beau-ideal of a wife.

[Extracted from the Bhūḥ-hyyur, mdo kha, leaf 106-7; corresponding with leaf 73-74 of the Lalīta viśāra, the original Sanscrit text, in the Lantsa character, presented to the Society by Mr. Hodgson].

The required qualities in a maiden who may aspire to be united in marriage with Shakya are thus defined by himself:

“No ordinary woman is suitable to my taste and habits; none who is incorrect in her behaviour; who has bad qualities, or who does not speak the truth. But she alone will be pleasing and fit for me, who, exhilarating my mind, is chaste, young, of good complexion, and of a pure and decent.” He indited a catalogue of these qualifications in verse, and said to his father, “If there shall be found any girl with the virtues I have described, since I like not an unrestrained woman, let her be given to me in marriage.” “She, who is young, well proportioned, and elegant, yet not boastful of her beauty, (lit. with her body;) who is affectionate towards her brother, sister, and mother; who alway rejoicing in giving alms, knoweth the proper manner how to bestow them on the priests and brahmans:—if there be found any such damsel, father, let her be brought to me. One who being without arrogance, pride, and passion, hath left off artifice, envy, deceit, and is of an upright nature:—who even in her dreams hath not lusted after any other man:—who resteth content with her husband, and is always submissive and chaste:—who is firm and not wavering:—who is not proud or haughty, but full of humility like a female slave:—who hath no excessive fondness for the vanities of sound, smell, taste, (music, perfumes, and exquisite meats,) nor for wine:—who is void of cupidity:—who hath not a covetous heart, but is content with her own possessions:—who, being upright, goeth not astray; is not fluctuating; is modest in her dress, and doth not indulge in laughing and boasting:—who is diligent in her moral duties, without being too much addicted to the gods and festivals (or righteous overmuch). Who is very clean and pure in her body, her speech and her mind:—who is not drowsy nor dull, proud nor stupid:—but being of good judgment, doth everything with due reflection:—who hath for her father and mother-in-law equal reverence as for a spiritual teacher:—who treateth her servants both male and female with constant mildness:—who is as well versed as any courtesan in the rites and ceremonies described in the Shastras:—who goeth last to sleep and riseth earliest from her couch:—who maketh every endeavour with mildness, like a mother without affectation:—if there be any such maiden to be found, father, give her unto me as a wife.”

* See Journal, vol. i. page 380, and page 1—8, where a brief analysis is given by Mr. Wilson, of the contents of the Lalīta viśāra.

Afterwards, the king (Sans. Shuddhodana, Tib. Zas-Qtsang-ma,) directs his brahman minister (Sans. Purohita, Tib. Mdhon-na-hdon,) to go into the great city of Capila-vastru, (Tib. Ser-skya-qschi,) and to inquire there in every house after a girl endowed with these good qualities, shewing at the same time ShAKYA’s letter, and uttering two Slíkas, or verses, of the following meaning: “Bring hither that maiden who hath the required qualities, whether she be of the royal tribe, or of the brahman caste; of the gentry, or of the plebeian class. My son regardeth not tribe nor family extraction: his delight is in good qualities, truth, and virtue alone.”

The objections of the Buddhists to the seclusion of woman may be gathered from the following imaginary conversation of ShAKYA’s wife, extracted from the Kah-gyur, Do, Kh. vol. leaf 120-121, (corresponding with the Sanscrit Lalita vistara, leaf 85.)
Sd-htha-ma, (S. Gópa,) the wife of Sámaya, upon hearing of her being upbraided by the domestics for not concealing her face when in company with others, expresses herself in some verses (against the veil), the meaning of which is as follows:

"Sitting, standing, and walking, those that are venerable, are pleasing when not concealed. A bright gem will give more lustre if put on the top of a standard. The venerable are pleasing when they go, they are agreeable also when they come. They are so whether they stand or whether they are sitting. In every manner the venerable are pleasing. The man excellent in virtue is pleasing when he speaks; he is so also when he sits still. As an example, doth not the Kalapiaka bird appear more beautiful when she chanteth her lovely song in your presence? The venerable man who putteth on a garment made of the kuska grass, or whose equalid clothing concealeth not his emaciated body, still shineth with his own lustre. He that hath good qualities is adorned by those qualifications. They who have put off all vices are venerable. Fools, committing vices, howsoever they be adorned, are never pleasing. Those that have malice in their heart and speak a sweet language are like a poisoned bowl into which nectar is poured; or a cleft on a rock that is rough both inside and outside. Communion with such men is as though you would touch the mouth of a snake. With respect to the venerable, all resort to them, all reverence them. They are supported and cherished by all men, as the stairs descending to the water's edge are kept in repair by the multitude. The venerable are always like a bowl full of milk and curd. It is a great happiness to see human nature capable of such purity. Fraught with blissful consequences is the gift of such men as have renounced the company of the wicked, and being directed by a venerable religious guide, are become enamoured of the doctrine of the most perfect (Buddha). For such as have restrained their body, have suppressed the several defects of it, have refrained their speech, and never use a deceitful language; and having subdued the flesh, are held in restraint by a pure conscience: for such, to what purpose is the veiling of the face? They that have a cunning heart are impudent and shameless; and having not the required qualities, do not speak the truth:—though they should cover their body even with a thousand clothes, they would go about in the world more naked than the unclothed. They that have concealed their passions, and have kept them under subjection, and are content with their own husbands, and think not on any other:—such women, when not concealed by a veil, shineth forth like the sun and moon. Moreover Drang-Srongo, (S. R.ś'hi,) the great Lord (God), who is wise in knowing the hearts of others, yea, also the whole company of the gods, know my thoughts, my good morals, my virtues, my obligation, and my chastity. Therefore, why should I conceal my face?"

Zas-Qisang-ma, (S. Shuddhodana, the father of Shakyā,) her father-in-law, was much pleased with these expressions, and presented her with several precious things. He uttered at the same time one slōka, the meaning of which is this: "My son being adorned with such qualities as he has, and my daughter-in-law having such virtuous qualifications as she describes; to see two such pure persons united together, is like when butter and ghee are mixed together."

As breathing in accordance with the virtuous sentiments of the above favourable specimen of the Tibetan sacred works, we may here extract a curious correspondence, (whether imaginary or real we will not pretend to determine,) stated to have taken place between a princess of Ceylon and the Buddhist saint. This letter is very generally known and admired throughout Tibet, being introduced in every collection of epistolary forms for the instruction of youth.

Ratnāvali’s Letter to Shākyā.

Mutig-chen, (S. Ratnavali,) a young princess of Ceylon, the daughter of the king of Singala, having been informed by some merchants of Central India (Madhyam) of Buddha and of his doctrine; she was much pleased with it; and, when those merchants returned home, she sent some presents to Chom-Dan-Das (Shākyā), with a letter of the following contents:

"Reverenced by the Suras, Asuras, and men; really delivered from birth, sickness, and fear; Lord! who art greatly celebrated by thy far extending renown, from the Sage’s ambrosial portion, kindly grant me!

Shākyā received this letter, and sent to the princess a picture of Buddha on cotton cloth, with some verses written above and below the image, containing the terms upon which refuge is obtained with Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha; and a few fundamental articles of the faith; together with two stanzas recommendatory of Buddhism. In a letter to the king of Singala, SAKYA prescribes with what solemnity this image should be received, the letter perused, and made known in Ceylon.

The stanzas are these. See Dulva, vol. 5, leaf 30,

महात्मगुरूमा जेन्युद्वृत्तिः। अतिशद्रामंत्रयंसव�ं।
मद्यविभयं तत्त्वंसवयं। किन्नर्द्रामंत्रयंसवयं।
प्रमोदज्ञानं तत्त्वंसवयं। किन्नर्द्रामंत्रयंसवयं।
प्राचीनमण्डलं तत्त्वंसवयं। किन्नर्द्रामंत्रयंसवयं।

“Arise, commence a new course of life. Turn to the religion of Buddha. Conquer the host of the lord of death, (the passions,) that are like an elephant in this muddy house, (the body,) (or conquer your passions, like as an elephant subdues every thing under his feet in a muddy lake.) Whoever has lived a pure or chaste life, according to the precepts of this Dulva, shall be free from transmigration, and shall put an end to all his miseries.”

The compendium, or sum of the Buddhistic doctrine in one slōka, runs thus:

स्वप्नमयं ज्ञानं ज्ञानं। न न्यूनात्मविन्युद्वृत्तिः।
स्वप्नमयं ज्ञानं ज्ञानं। न न्यूनात्मविन्युद्वृत्तिः।
स्वप्नमयं ज्ञानं ज्ञानं। न न्यूनात्मविन्युद्वृत्तिः।
स्वप्नमयं ज्ञानं ज्ञानं। न न्यूनात्मविन्युद्वृत्तिः।

“No vice is to be committed, Virtue must perfectly be practised,—Subdue entirely your thoughts. This is the doctrine of Buddha.”

II.—Some Remarks upon the Country to the South-west of Hoshungabad, and of the Soil, Cultivation, &c. of that part of the Valley of the Nerbudda, situated between Hoshungabad and the Fort of Mukrai, in the lower range of the Kali-bheet Hills. By Lieut. R. H. Miles.

The cantonment of Hoshungabad is situated on a high kankar bank, on the southern side or left bank of the Nerbudda. The bed of the river below the bank is likewise of kankar, and presents in the dry season a rocky appearance. This kankar formation in the river extends about half way across it, and runs parallel with the bank above, whose length extends one mile and a quarter, uninterrupted and unchanged.

The situation of the town and fort, (which latter is of stone, quadrangular in shape, and with high walls,) is in a gentle hollow to the westward of the cantonments. The bank of the river is not only low under the town, but changes its kankar nature for a loamy soil,