In literary Tibetan many verbs have different roots in their different moods and tenses, but not all of these differences are observed in the colloquial speech of the present day and in ordinary correspondence. In this book there are set out in tabular form what purport to be the actual spelling and pronunciation of the infinitive, past, future, and imperative roots of 229 of the commoner Tibetan verbs, as spelt and pronounced at the present day by people of average education in Lhasa. It is hoped that critics will be so good as to indicate their agreement or disagreement with the versions here given.

The arrangement is as follows :—

in the first line, in Tibetan characters, the infinitive in full, the past, future and imperative roots, and the key number under which the verb appears in the WORD BOOK;
in the second line, a letter by letter transcription (omitting the infinitive termination) of the Tibetan text of the first line;
in the third line, a phonetic rendering of the Tibetan text.

on the left, the meaning or meanings of the verb in English, together with the meaning of an expletive word which helps to fix the meaning of the verb, and the key number of the expletive word; on the right, the expletive word in Tibetan characters, and its phonetic rendering. This association of an expletive word with a verb is in accordance with Tibetan school practice.

On page x of the General Preface to the Word Book it was stated that a separate key number is assigned to each syllable which is differently spelt in Tibetan. In the case of verbs it is not feasible to put this rule into effect until the spelling of the roots has been determined.

This book is no more than a first attempt to clear up, in a small space and within the limits of the amount of attention which can be devoted to the matter at the present time, some of the difficulties which beset the study of the Tibetan verb. Other work which remains to be done is to determine whether, generally or in the case of individual verbs, it is in fact practicable to draw a line of distinction between the classical forms and current practice in speech and writing; whether the infinitive root is always constant or varies according as the sense of the infinitive is present, past, future, positive, or negative; whether the present root is the same as the infinitive root; and what root is used in such cases as the future formed with རྒྱྲྷ· yong, the polite imperative formed with རྩୟସྚྲྷ· ro-che or རྩୟସྚྲྷନྰྷ· ro-nang, the negative imperative, the conditional ནྷ na, the present and past participles རྩୟྷ tü and རྩୟྷ ne, the agentives དྷྷ ngen ཤྣ୍ଡྷ khen གྷྷ pa and

ဗု pa, the verbal noun ending in ယူ ya, and compound verbs formed with such verbs as နှစ်သုရာं gö-pa to be necessary ခြေသုရာं thup-pa to be able ခွဲသုရာं chhok-pa to be allowed ရှိသုရာं dö-pa to wish and the honorific အနှစ်သုရား nang-wa.

There may also be diversity of spelling and of pronunciation according as a syllable is used as (part of) a verb or as (part of) a word which is not a verb.

A few interleaved copies of this book are available for the use of those who are willing to help.
