P R E F A C E

The following is an index of the proper names of places occurring in George N. Roerich's translation of the Tibetan historical text The Blue Annals, as published in The Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal Monograph Series, vol. VII, Part One (1949) and Part Two (1953) at Calcutta.

The second volume of Roerich's translation includes indexes of book titles in Sanskrit and Tibetan, and of personal names in Sanskrit, Tibetan, Chinese, and Mongolian; and it is hoped that this place name index will be a useful addition to those indexes.

The index is arranged according to the sequence of the Tibetan alphabet, and the transcription was made according to the system used by Roerich in his translation. There were not enough Sanskrit place names to warrant a separate indexing, therefore these will be found according to the Tibetan alphabetical sequence. The Sanskrit letters " v " and " ś " are listed under the Tibetan letters " w " and " ś ", respectively.

Although this is primarily a place name index, I have included certain proper names which are not actually place names; such as, the names of certain statues, tombs, and chortens. These non-place names are printed in italics to render them readily identifiable as such. In addition to the names of major geographical locations and physical structures, I have included the proper names of all places, even though they might be no more than a grove of trees or a huge boulder, in the hope of making this index even more useful to those doing Tibetan research. On the other hand, the names of supramundane locations are omitted unless such names might be of value for a mundane identification. Also omitted are the names of countries as a whole, e.g., Tibet, China, Nepal, etc.; but the names of smaller geographical units, such as U-rgyan, mÑa-ris, etc., are included.

While compiling this index, it became apparent that there were misprints in the published translation, which were not indicated in the Errata. Whenever a place name appeared to be misprinted, or varied in spelling upon a subsequent occurrence, it was compared with a copy of the original Tibetan text, kindly loaned to me by Professor Tucci, in order to obtain the correct spelling. Although it would be impractical to list each of these corrections here in the preface, the following are some of the more interesting cases.

The most frequent misprint is due to the omission of the diacritical dot above the “ñ”, which transcribes the Tibetan letter ལ, e.g., bon-gron (II, p. 448) should read bon-groñ. There are a few composing errors, e.g., gaon-mkhar (II, p. 1088) should read groñ-mkhar; and Phag-mo-thu (I, p. 198) is, of course, Phag-mo-gru.

The contradictory spellings of sTod-luñs 'phar-tshar (I, p. 234) and sTod-luñs 'phar-tshan (II, p. 487) proved, under comparison with the original text, to be both wrong; the correct spelling being sTod-luñs 'phar-tshañ.

The various spellings of U-yug, U-yog, and 'U-yug, all proved to be 'U-yug, and are therefore listed in the index under the single entry of 'U-yug.

On the other hand, the various spellings of lKog-phreñ (II, p. 492), Kog-'phreñ (II, p. 496), and lKog-'phrañ (II, p. 543) are all confirmed by Professor Tucci's copy; however, since all three appear to be variations of the same name, they are listed under the single entry of lKog-'phreñ. The suspicious readings of Dags-po Kroñs-kha (II, p. 657) and of Dags-po rDzoñs-kha (II, p. 874) are also confirmed, and are listed as two separate entries.

Lastly, instead of Be-ba-la (II, p. 868), Professor Tucci's copy reads: Be-da-la, and is most likely the same name as Be-ta-la (Vetala) (I, p. 391 and p. 394).

In regards to those names which were misprinted in the published translation, only the corrected spellings will be found in the index. It is to be noted, however, that only those names which appeared to be in error were compared with the original text; to have done more would have required more time than the nature of this index would have warranted.

I wish to express my thanks to Dr. Roerich for his kind interest in this index; and my gratitude to Professor Tucci for making its publication possible.
